A Recipe from America's Resort™

The Jerry West Family Caesar Salad

2 Cups Croutons
1 Garlic Clove
Juice of 2 Lemons
2 Eggs
5 anchovy filets
2 Tbsp. Olive Oil
1/2 tsp. Dry Mustard
1/2 tsp. Worcestershire Sauce
Salt and Freshly ground pepper to taste
2 heads of Romaine Lettuce
1/2 Cup Grated Parmesan

Prepare croutons by frying cubes of sourdough bread in olive oil flavored with a clove of split garlic.

In a blender combine oil, garlic, lemon juice, mustard, worcestershire sauce, and anchovy filets.

Into a garlic rubbed wooden bowl, tear heads of lettuce into medium sized pieces and sprinkle with cheese, pepper and salt. Pour dressing on lettuce. Break eggs on the greens add extra anchovy filets, and toss enough to mix thoroughly but not so vigorously as to bruise the greens, and until no trace of the egg is seen. An instant before serving, add the croutons so they won't become soggy.

The Greenbrier's PGA TOUR stop

FOCUSED ON HONORING AMERICAN HEROES

Last spring, tournament officials made the decision to change the name of the PGA TOUR's annual stop at The Greenbrier from The Greenbrier Classic, which had been the name since the tournament's inception in 2010, to A Military Tribute at The Greenbrier. It was a change that made perfect sense.

America's Resort™ has a long connection with the United States Military that dates all the way back to the Civil War, when both the Union and the Confederacy occupied the property at different times.

The Greenbrier officially fell under military control during World War II, when the property was purchased by the U.S. Army and transformed into Ashford General Hospital, and the connections don't stop there. A Cold War fallout shelter was built on the property to house members of the United States Congress in the event of an attack on America. Twenty-seven U.S. presidents have visited the property. And the list of ties goes on and on.

So, especially with the tournament regularly falling over Independence Day, it made perfect sense to make the name change to honor that history, as well as the American heroes who protect our freedom every day.

The move to the fall season for 2019-20 took the tournament off of the Fourth of July, but A Military Tribute at The Greenbrier, which will take place September 9-15, 2019, happens to fall on another significant date in American history, the anniversary of the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks.

With that in mind, new Executive Tournament Director Robert Harris has doubled down on the tournament's commitment to honoring not only the men and women of the United States Military, but also our country's first responders, who come to our aid every day.

"This tournament is about bringing the world's best golfers to The Greenbrier, but it's about so much more," said Harris. "We are committed to honoring the selfless sacrifices of the men and women of the U.S. Military and first responders across the country, and our tournament team has dedicated itself to our mission statement, 'Serve those who serve all of us.'

As Harris mentioned, the commitment goes well beyond a name and a motto. A Military Tribute at The Greenbrier has made a pledge to assist Army Emergency Relief, the Navy-Marine Relief Society, First Responders Children's Foundation and other relief organizations with financial contributions. Those organizations will also have displays to explain their missions to fans at the tournament.

The entrance to A Military Tribute at The Greenbrier will be lined with interactive displays from the military and first responders, with special events planned throughout the week. A touching 9/11 remembrance will take place during the Official Wednesday Pro-Am, followed by a parade Wednesday evening to honor the heroes of September 11 and the local heroes that protect us locally on a daily basis.

Military members, veterans and first responders will receive complimentary admission to the tournament – practice rounds Monday through Wednesday and the official tournament rounds Thursday through Sunday – and the event, which will bring the world's top golfers to the historic Old White TPC course, will conclude with a special awards ceremony that again puts military members and first responders in the spotlight on Sunday afternoon.

A Military Tribute at The Greenbrier set for September 9-15

"It's really going to be a fantastic week, and we anticipate large crowds throughout the week" said Harris. "The competition on the course will be as good as you will find anywhere, the fan experience will be second-to-none and fans will also have an opportunity to show their appreciation for America's true heroes."

Fans and Fan Favorites welcome

The Greenbrier Champions Tennis Classic returns to America's Resort™ September 13 and 14, 2019, and the eighth edition of the grand tennis showcase is expected to be the biggest to date.

In 2012, The Greenbrier made the decision that it was time to honor its rich tennis tradition with a showcase worthy of the resort's history with the game – which dates back to the 1890s and includes the Mason and Dixon Championships and greats of the sport like Bill Tilden and Francis Hunter.

The Greenbrier Champions Tennis Classic was the result, and on September 22, 2012, tennis legends John McEnroe and Pete Sampras battled it out on the Har-Tru courts outside of The Greenbrier Tennis and Fitness Center to start what has now become an annual tradition.

For the second year, the event expanded to two days and added a doubles match to join the two singles matches, and the growth never ended.

In the years that followed, The Greenbrier Champions Tennis Classic continued to bring the world's best tennis players to America's Resort™, and the showcase grew in both size and popularity.

In 2015, the event found a new home with the construction of Center Court at Creekside, a 2,650-seat stadium on the banks of Howard's Creek. The state-of-the-art tennis stadium hosted Sampras and McEnroe, along with Jim Courier and James Blake that year, and in 2016 women's players were added to the slate for the first time, when Venus Williams and Shelby Rogers joined Sampras and McEnroe on the new Deco-Turf surface that was installed in the stadium that year.

the return of The Greenbrier Champions Tennis Classic

The 2018 Greenbrier Champions Tennis Classic was another monumental occasion, as Serena Williams joined her sister Venus, and the lineup expanded to six players.

This year, The Greenbrier Champions Tennis Classic will be held in conjunction with the annual PGA TOUR stop at The Greenbrier, A Military Tribute at The Greenbrier. But that's not the only change that adds intrigue to the 2019 event.

For the first time, all of the matches will be played in the evening hours, as the lights will shine brightly on Center Court at Creekside Stadium. The stars will fill the nighttime sky, as well as the stadium court.

"We have found a way to make this tennis showcase bigger and better every year since our first year in 2012, and this year is no different," said Dr. Jill Justice, President, The Greenbrier. "We have six fantastic players and four incredible matches that we know fans will enjoy."

On Friday, September 13, the first match will be played at 5:30pm, a mixed doubles contest featuring the Bryan Brothers, Bob and Mike, along with Serena Williams and Caroline Wozniacki. That contest will be followed by the men's singles event, featuring Jack Sock against Taylor Fritz.

The second day of tennis action, Saturday, September 14, will begin with the women's singles match, Williams against Wozniacki at 5:30pm, followed by a men's doubles match pitting Sock and Fritz up against the Bryan brothers.

In addition to these showcase matches, The Greenbrier Champions Tennis Classic will also include autograph sessions with the tennis stars.

As an added bonus, ticket-holders for The Greenbrier Champions Tennis Classic will also receive a complimentary ticket to attend A Military Tribute at The Greenbrier on The Old White TPC course.

For tickets and more information, visit Greenbrier.com/TennisClassic.

40 YEARS AGO

Golf at The Greenbrier Graduated

The Greenbrier's place in golf history had already been cemented by the mid-1900s. From golfing legend Sam Snead, who served as the Golf Professional at America's Resort™ from 1936 through 1974 – later returning as the Golf Professional Emeritus from 1993 until his death in 2002 – to presidents, dignitaries and celebrities who walked the fairways and putted on the greens, those who understood golf in the United States knew all about The Greenbrier.

But it was an event 40 years ago this year that really crowned The Greenbrier as one of golf's ultimate destinations.

In 1976, The Greenbrier hired Jack Nicklaus with one goal in mind, rebuilding The Greenbrier Course to host the Ryder Cup in 1979. The course, which had opened in 1924 had the pedigree, but some changes had to be made for it to host the best in the world. So, for 22 months, Nicklaus and his team focused on every hole on the course. The greens were rebuilt, a lake was added, the number of bunkers was increased to 44, and par went from 70 to 72.

The new course officially opened on Memorial Day Weekend in 1978, but it was introduced to the world September 14-16, 1979, when the 23rd Ryder Cup Matches came to White Sulphur Springs, W.Va.

The 1979 Ryder Cup was a significant one. Since 1927, British and American professional teams had competed for the trophy, but in 1979 the British team was replaced by Team Europe, a move that was made to help raise the profile of the event and make the competition, which had been dominated by the United States since the end of World War II, a little tighter.

Captaining the European team was John Jacobs, and his squad was filled with big names, including a pair of 22-year-old phenoms in Seve Ballesteros of Spain and Nick Faldo of Great Britain. Mark James, Brian Barnes, Bernard Gallacher, Sandy Lyle, Ken Brown, Antonio Garrido, Tony Jacklin, Michael King, Des Smyth and Peter Oosterbuis made up the rest of the European team.

Remembering The Ryder Cup at The Greenbrier

From The Cover

Captained by Billy Casper, the United States came into the competition with no intention of relinquishing its dominance. The team had a strong mix of youth (26-year-old Andy Bean, 27-year-old Fuzzy Zoeller, 29-year-old Tom Kite) and experience (45-year-old Lee Elder, 39-year-old Lee Trevino, 34-year-old Hale Irwin). Tom Watson was supposed to be a part of the U.S. team, but he left the day before the competition began to be there for the birth of his first child. He was replaced by first-alternate Mark Hayes. The rest of the team included Gil Morgan, Hubert Green, Larry Nelson, John Mahaffey and Lanny Wadkins.

The United States jumped out to a quick start, winning three of the four morning four-ball matches, and the U.S. team won two afternoon foursomes, and halved another, to take a 5 ½-2 ½ lead into Saturday's play.

The European team, though, captured three of the four morning foursomes to cut the gap to one point, and after the afternoon four-ball competition was split to points each, the U.S. team entered the final day clinging to a slim 8 ½-7 ½ advantage.

The nation tuned in on ABC Television on that final day, and the U.S. team didn't disappoint in the morning singles. Gallacher's win over Wadkins was the only European victory in those morning matches, as Nelson, Kite, Hayes, Bean and Mahaffey all won singles matches for the guys in red, white and blue to take a 13 1/2 -8 ½ lead.

The morning domination left the Americans just one point away from claiming victory, and that came easily as Irwin, Green and Trevino all won afternoon matches to clinch a 17-11 win for the United States.

The newly redesigned Greenbrier Course went on to host the American Express Championship on the Senior Tour from 1985 through 1987, and then in 1994 it hosted the Solheim Cup, becoming the first resort course to host both the Ryder Cup and Solheim Cup.

Today, The Greenbrier Course is open as a nine-hole routing, giving golfers an opportunity to see Nicklaus' vision and walk in the footsteps of those golfing greats who made history 40 years ago.

FOCUS ON True

The Greenbrier Golf Academy has supplied world class instruction to guests and members for decades, and the newest offering assures that the technology matches the instruction.

True Spec Golf recently opened its newest facility at America's Resort™, and it has quickly become a popular spot for golf enthusiasts of all levels looking to improve their game.

True Spec Greenbrier features a spacious covered-outdoor hitting bay, a pristine short game facility and Trackman club-fitting technology.

"Combining the wonderful golf tradition at The Greenbrier with True Spec's revolutionary system of golf club fitting provides an experience we know our golfers will love," said Robert Harris, Vice President of Golf at The Greenbrier. "Golfers of every level will benefit from this new partnership."

So how does it work?

First, True Spec Greenbrier Master Fitter, Jake Owen, measures a player's current set and observes performance. He then works through different combinations of the clubhead and shaft matrix, which includes all major OEM brands. Utilizing Trackman launch monitor technology to evaluate wedges, irons, hybrids, woods and drivers, the best solution is found.

"We are going to test their swing and their equipment and see how it performs," said Owen. "They may already have the best equipment. We may just need to do something as simple as a loft adjustment. But if it's not the best equipment, we're going to test every manufacturer from Taylor Made, Titleist, Callaway, etc., and see which one gives them the best performance, based off the specifications."

Once Owen and the customer are satisfied that they have found the best combination, the order is sent to True Spec's facility in Scottsdale, Arizona, where each club is hand-built to meet the specifications. Golfers usually have their new set within a three-week time frame.

Spec Golf

AT THE GREENBRIER

The relationship doesn't stop there. If the golfer is not satisfied with the clubs' performance, True Spec will refund the money and go through the process again, until the customer is happy.

Fitting services range from $125 to $450, depending on the fitting type. Fittings can be done on particular clubs or every club in the bag.

The True Spec Greenbrier facility is located at The Greenbrier Golf Academy, at the far end of the driving range across from the clubhouse. The Greenbrier Golf Academy originally opened as the Sam Snead Golf Academy in 1999. The Greenbrier Golf Professional Emeritus at the time, Snead, the PGA TOUR's all-time wins leader, gave lessons out of the facility that honored his legacy.

"The Greenbrier is rich in history and boasts one of the best golf facilities in the world," said True Spec CEO Hoyt McGarity. "We're excited to bring our unparalleled fitting experience to guests and members of the resort."

True Spec is not the only group occupying The Greenbrier Golf Academy. Director of Instruction Billy Winters, who has been with The Greenbrier since 2005 and was named the best instructor in West Virginia by Golf Digest in 2018, also works out of the newly remodeled facility. Winters gives private lessons, playing lessons, swing clinics, short game clinics, half-day schools and junior clinics, as well as the most popular option, custom Golf Academy experiences.

"Billy is an awesome instructor," said Owen. "I love working with him. It's great for him to be a part of the process. It's perfect when I know what he is working on with a player, and I can gear the fitting toward making sure they get what they need to achieve that goal."

Baltimore Row Cottages have stood for nearly 200 years

The Baltimore Row cottages – which overlook the North Lawn of The Greenbrier, including the gazebo – are some of the oldest and most historic buildings on the 11,000 acres on America's Resort, and after nearly two centuries, they still serve as some of the most functional and popular accommodations.

The Baltimore Row cottages were built as an upgrade to the Paradise Row and Alabama Row cottages, which were some of the first permanent structures built on the property of the resort, then known as White Sulphur Springs.

James Calwell, who owned and managed the resort throughout most of the 1800s, persuaded families from his native Baltimore, Maryland, to build cottages on the grounds to serve as their summer homes. John H.B. Latrobe, son of architect Benjamin Latrobe, designed the first Baltimore Row cottage, Baltimore A, in 1832, and the other six followed shortly thereafter. By 1840, seven nearly identical cottages stood on Alabama Row.

"Paradise Row was pretty basic with a single room or maybe two rooms in some," explained The Greenbrier historian, Dr. Robert Conte. "So, this was stepping up the game. Latrobe was also from Baltimore, so there was clearly a connection there."

Although the design of the buildings is similar, what makes the collection special – from both a historical and practical perspective – are the subtle differences that make each home unique.

For example, Baltimore E was purchased by Jerome Napoleon Bonaparte Jr. He was the son of Elizabeth (Betsy) Patterson Bonaparte, an American socialite who was the first wife of Napoleon Bonaparte's brother, Jerome.

During World War II, the cottage was used as a home for physicians, who worked at The Greenbrier when the entire property was purchased by the U.S. Army and converted into Ashford General Hospital.

It's not only the history that makes Baltimore E unique. Like most of the cottages, it features a beautiful front porch and a wood-burning fireplace, but this cottage is the only Baltimore Row unit with an upstairs, built to house the family of upper-level executives of The Greenbrier who called the cottage home over the years.

The upstairs section includes a bathroom, a long bedroom perfect for children with two built-in single beds, and another bedroom with a king bed. Today, the cottage is perfect for a family vacationing at America's Resort™.

Baltimore F has its own unique features. It is adorned with 16 pictures of different leaves and includes three bedrooms, a dining room, a living room and a wet bar. Offered as a guest accommodation for the last 29 years, the cottage was remodeled in 1990 and again in 2015.

Perhaps the most famous of the Baltimore Row cottages is Baltimore G, also known as the Lee Cottage.

Originally owned by George Harrison – not the one from the Beatles – the cottage was built with two bedrooms and two parlors for entertaining, which helped draw Harrison's good friend, General Robert E. Lee, to the home for multiple visits.

Lee rode his famous horse, Traveller, who was purchased in Greenbrier County, to Harrison's cottage in 1867, 1868 and 1869, visiting the sulphur springs to help with his wife's arthritis.

Since 1984, the cottage has been reserved for guests, and it is decorated with a collection of Lee memorabilia, including a picture of the barn where Traveler was born and a print of a Natalie Grauer original of Lee riding Traveler. It features two bedrooms, a living room and a dining room.

"All of the photos were stored in our archives," said Conte. "The original Grauer painting was a huge painting, which was at least 12 feet by 8 feet. We actually have pictures of her sketching it out."

Each of the seven Baltimore Row cottages offer something unique in its design or history. Baltimore A was the first one built and was owned by John Ridgely of Hampton. Baltimore B features unique fabrics and wallpapers in each room, while Baltimore C contains four bedrooms and a wet bar. Baltimore D also contains four bedrooms and features a unique set of photos in its dining room.

If you're a history buff, a stay in the Baltimore Row cottages is a great way to look back at The Greenbrier's incredible past, but you don't have to be a student of history to enjoy the customized setups that the cottages offer to accommodate many different groups of visitors, who can still enjoy all the amenities offered to guests who stay inside the main hotel.

Sam Snead's Doctor says goodbye.

When Dr. Thomas Dotson first considered the idea of becoming part of the team at The Greenbrier Clinic in 1970, he didn't think he wanted any part of it. Fifty years later, he's still not 100 percent convinced he'll actually be able to walk away.

Dotson, who will turn 80 in September, will officially retire from The Greenbrier Clinic this summer, and it will be no easy assignment walking out the doors of the place he has grown to love for five decades.

"I love medicine. So, I'm having a hard time with this quitting," Dotson joked. "The hardest part of walking away is the patients. I love people, and I have a very loyal following. I'm going to miss them. They're like family. I've been seeing some of them for almost 50 years. I had one guy in (this month) I have been seeing for 47 straight years. That's a long time."

The journey that took Dotson from a 30-year-old fresh from the United States Navy to an 80-year-old who has become a local legend was an unlikely one.

The Summersville, W.Va., native, who graduated from the West Virginia University School of Medicine and spent two years at the U.S. Navy hospital at Camp Lejeune during Vietnam, first considered The Greenbrier Clinic when his then-brother-in-law, C.J. Richardson, was working at the front desk for the summer. Richardson told Dotson that the staff at The Greenbrier Clinic wanted to interview him, and when Dotson scoffed at the idea, Richardson wouldn't have it.

"He said, 'Tom, I have to work here. Now you have to come over and interview,'" Dotson remembered.

So, Dotson agreed that while on a trout fishing trip in the area, he would stop by one day if, and only if, his fishing was rained out. Mother Nature, in fact, stepped in, and Dotson made the soggy trip to White Sulphur Springs for an interview, wearing Richardson's too-tight sport coat, because he had left his behind.

"I sat with Ed Crumpacker for 30 minutes, and he convinced me that I wouldn't be happy anywhere else but The Greenbrier Clinic," said Dotson. "He told me I would like the type of practice, because I would be able to do academic medicine without the publish or perish mentality."

Dotson has never regretted the decision, though his job description quickly changed when he arrived for the new duties. Because he had a security clearance for his days in the U.S. Navy, Dotson was quickly put on assignment in The Greenbrier's secret Cold War bunker, which was to house the U.S. Congress in the event of a nuclear attack.

"I was part of that bunker team right off the bat," said Dotson. "They didn't give me a whole lot of choice, but it was a fascinating experience."

Dotson first made the decision to walk away from The Greenbrier Clinic in 2001. At age 62, he figured it was time to do what most people his age were doing and retire.

He was gone for two weeks before the other doctors came to him and asked what he would want to return. He asked for no more night calls and the freedom to work nine months out of the year, and for the last 17 years, that's exactly what he's done.

Over the course of his long career, Dotson said he's made thousands of memories – too many to even single out any favorites – and he's worked with numerous patients, most of whom have become friends.

He's even treated a few celebrities along the way, including the legendary Sam Snead.

"That was one of the highlights," said Dotson. "I was Sam Snead's doctor for 25 years. Taking care of the Slammer was a real experience."

But the fun-loving doctor has found a way to have a good time with every patient that has come through his office door, and he's proud of the what he accomplished.

"The most rewarding part of this practice is the ability to get to sit down with people and really get to know them," he said. "That and having the resources available to diagnose them. When you come in with a complaint, we can pretty well tell you what's going on before you leave.

"I've had several patients that I have gotten into their 90s after finding and curing two or three cancers. We've managed heart disease and a lot of problems. That's what makes this clinic special.

"I've been really successful. I think I have practiced really good medicine. I have the respect and love of my patients, which means the world to me. I woke up every day excited to go to work."

So why enter into that second retirement – which will still include a few days a month in the office – now?

"I'm still not sure," Dotson said with a chuckle. "But when you turn 80, that's a milestone. When you pass the life expectancy of 78, everything from there on is a bonus. So, when you get to 80, you say, 'What's the best I can have?' I need to spend some time with my wife."

Dotson and his wife, Deloris, have a condo on a golf course in Myrtle Beach, and he expects to spend more time there, as well as with his four children and six grandchildren. He'll also plans on many more adventures in the woods and waters of West Virginia and beyond, enjoying the other loves of his life, hunting and fishing.

Dotson will also spend some of that free time at another spot that has become quite meaningful in his life over the past half-century, America's Resort™.

"Deloris and I have enjoyed the hotel," said Dotson. "Two of my daughters were married and had their receptions here. It's where we celebrated all of our anniversaries and family gatherings. That's been really special.

"We'll probably enjoy some more time here and take advantage of what's offered to us."

Although Dotson is stepping away, The Greenbrier Clinic will continue on, and he'll watch from afar still proud of the one key factor that has kept this incredibly unique clinic in business since 1948.

"Good quality medicine," he said of what has made his place of business so successful for so long. "I really believe that. We're dinosaurs. Nobody has this kind of time to spend with the patient anymore, but we do."
